

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

WESTON Milliken WFMXTRAC@gmail.com

(Please print name and email)

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

 Fran Rogers
(Please print name and email)

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

Charles Rodgers crodgers@newcomfund.org
(Please print name and email)

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

Christy A. Wallace CWallace5@aol.com
(Please print name and email)

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

H. Scott Wallace swallace@wgf.org
(Please print name and email)
Wallace Global Fund

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

Sander Stravs SAN STRAVS@GMAIL.COM
(Please print name and email)

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

Rochelle Kaplan ro@wifunds.com

(Please print name and email)

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

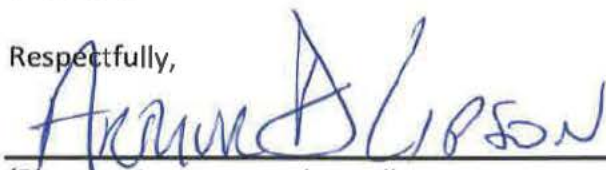

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

(Please print name and email)

ARTHUR D LIPSON

ART@WIFUNDS.COM

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington D.C. 20554

November 13, 2014

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

America was built on the fundamental value of freedom of expression where every idea has a fair shot and a level playing field. Real net neutrality should allow Americans to use the Internet without corporations dictating, blocking or promoting the content they see.

A record-setting four million Americans from across the political spectrum have asked the agency to preserve an open Internet. Polling shows this issue is truly non-partisan and that both Republican and Democratic voters want to protect the Internet from monopoly control.

President Obama has urged the FCC to create strong rules to preserve net neutrality by using its Title II authority. We urge you to issue these rules as soon as possible. Title II is the most legally sound and light-touch way to make sure Internet Service Providers are not allowed to create Internet fast lanes for companies who can afford it, and slow lanes for everyone else.

We need to leave the Internet open so that the next Google and Facebook can succeed and so that we can protect all Internet users. The innovation that the last 20 years of net neutrality has fostered is the key to America's economic future.

We know how important a fair and equal Internet is to all Americans. Please do all you can to protect it.

Respectfully,

Paul Harstad

paulinboulder@gmail.com

(Please print name and email)